Supported Currencies

List of currency codes and countries supported by our API endpoints

This page describes all the world currencies supported by our exchange rate API and the codes used to describe them in our responses. The "Currency Code" field you see at the start of each line below is the ISO 4217 Three Letter Currency Code for that currency. Wherever you see a currency code field in our API documentation you must supply one of the codes from this list.

Please note that ISO 4217 codes can be deprecated and replaced over time. An example would be Mexico using MXP prior to the 1993 currency revaluation but now using MXN to indicate the subsequent version of the Mexican Peso. Some online lists of currency codes still use old codes - so check here if you're uncertain about which codes to include in your currency conversion project.

You can read more about ISO 4217 codes on Wikipedia.

Unsupported Currencies

There is only 1 widely known currency we don't offer exchange rate data for due to sanctions & lack of any international trade.

Currency Code	Currency Name	Country
KPW	North Korean Won	North Korea

If you need KPW data the only reliable source of the actual rates available at jangmadang markets in DPRK is Daily NK, which reports on news from inside North Korea via human sources. There is technically an official rate set by the DPRK's Central Bank but this hasn't been updated for years and essentially never reflected actual rates of exchange.

Notes For Some Supported Currencies

The following currencies experience heightened volatility & substantial differences between actual rates of exchange available in different markets and those published officially. In these instances we default to the rates published by the appropriate central banks. Please take extra caution when using our data for these currencies as there is a chance it might disagree with other sources.
